Jeff Killino is the founder and managing partner of the nationally-recognized Killino Firm, P.C. Jeff has dedicated his legal practice to fighting for those injured or killed as a result of the negligence, recklessness, and corner-cutting employed by “big business” choosing profit over safety. In so doing, Mr. Killino has advanced the cause of reducing the number of traffic crashes, injuries, and deaths across America, by aggressively pursuing justice for the victims of commercial trucking companies who cause crashes when violating industry standards and regulations. Mr. Killino does not just end his quest for justice with the trucking companies who engage in these dangerous, reckless business practices which place the lives of American motorists in danger. He also holds responsible the trucking companies’ insurance carriers who help keep reckless trucking companies on the road just to collect policy premiums. When these insurance carriers engage in bad faith tactics to avoid paying meritorious victim claims based on insurance policy loopholes and ambiguities, including those created by insurance policies’ MCS-90 endorsements, Jeff will hold them accountable for their bad faith.

Mr. Killino has extensive experience in successfully taking on these trucking companies, their insurance carriers, and advocating for highway safety. Through his tireless efforts, Mr. Killino strives to not only achieve justice for his clients, but also deter commercial trucking companies from engaging in the dangerous, proscribed practices that continue to put the motoring public at risk, as well as punishing their insurance carriers who will stop at nothing to avoid paying victims of their insureds.

Mr. Killino received his J.D. from Widener University and his L.L.M. in Trial Advocacy from Temple University’s Beasley School of Law. He is currently a member of the American Association for Justice and the Multi-Million Dollar Advocates Forum.
